

Coffee Data Analysis

2.10 M TOTAL REVENUE

643K NUMBER OF UNITS

319.49K AVERAGE SALES

149K NUMBER OF SALES

Sales are strongest in Spring and Morning periods, with Coffee products driving most revenue. However, opportunities exist in upselling to mid/high spenders and balancing product mix

Sales by Store Location

- Hell’s Kitchen generates the highest revenue.
- Astoria and Manhattan are close in performance.
-

Recommendation:

- Consider promotions tailored by location (e.g., loyalty programs for Astoria, premium offerings in Hell’s Kitchen).

Sales by Product Category & Quantity Bucket

Insights:

- Coffee drives the most revenue (R767K Low, R43K Mid, R10.8K High).
- Bakery also performs well (R246K).
- High spenders exist only in Coffee beans & Branded products.

Recommendations:

- Upsell mid-tier coffee products.
- Expand premium categories like Coffee beans and Branded (luxury products).
- Reduce underperforming categories (Loose Tea, Flavours).

Sales Sales by Season

Insights:

- Spring is the strongest season (1.12M).
- Winter and Summer are significantly lower.

Recommendations:

- Run special campaigns in Winter/Summer to balance seasonality.
- Offer seasonal promotions (iced drinks in summer, warm bundles in winter).

Sales by Time of Day

Insights:

- Morning dominates, but evenings are weak.

Recommendations:

- Introduce happy hour promotions in the evening.

Spender Segmentation

Insights:

- Analysis shows that most of our customers are focused on price, while the ones who spend more only do so on specific, high-end products.

Recommendations:

- Launch tiered loyalty program (rewards for higher spend).
- Introduce premium coffee subscription for enthusiasts.

Conclusion

- 1.Revenue is Balanced, But Performance Varies: The three store locations (Hell's Kitchen, Astoria, Lower Manhattan) generate remarkably similar total revenue and units sold, indicating consistent brand performance. Hell's Kitchen has a slight edge.
- 2.Product Mix is Skewed: Coffee is the undisputed king, driving over 36% of total revenue. Bakery is a strong secondary category. Conversely, categories like Flavours and Loose Tea contribute very little.
- 3.The "High Value" Opportunity is Tiny but Real: A minuscule segment of customers (0.008%) classified as "High Spenders" generates an enormous Average Sale of R360, primarily on Coffee Beans and Branded products. This proves a market for premium products exists.
- 4.Clear Demand Peaks: Spring is the busiest season by far, and mornings drive almost half of all daily revenue. Evenings are a significant underperformer.
- 5.The Core Customer is a "Low Spender": 99.99% of all transactions are from customers with a low average spend. This is both the business's foundation and its biggest growth constraint.

Recommendations

Optimize the Product Portfolio

- Coffee and Bakery. These are your winners. Continue to innovate here with new blends, seasonal pastries, and limited-time.

Leverage Time-Based Promotions to Smooth Demand

- Launch "Afternoon Pick-Me-Up" Deals: (2 PM - 5 PM)
Offer a discount on coffee-pastry combos or iced drinks to drive traffic during the slower afternoon period.
- Introduce "Evening Wind-Down" Offers: (After 5 PM)
Promote decaf options, herbal teas, and hot chocolate, perhaps with a complimentary biscuit or small treat.
- Create Seasonal Campaigns: Develop strong iced beverage and cold brew programs for Spring/Summer.

Location-Specific Strategies

- Hell's Kitchen (Highest Revenue): Test premium, limited-edition products here first. The clientele may be more receptive to higher price points.
- Astoria & Lower Manhattan: Focus on loyalty and volume. Promotions like "9th coffee free" or "bring a friend" deals could resonate well to maintain their strong traffic.